Scott J. Bloch is a trial lawyer who has specialized in complex litigation, class actions, employment, defense base act, bad faith insurance, and personal injury for over 30 years, he has appeared in federal, state, administrative, and appellate courts across the country, including in the United States Supreme Court and is admitted to practice in the District of Columbia, state, federal and federal circuit court, California, and Kansas. His offices are in Washington, D.C. His areas of concentration are:

- Complex consumer, class action, personal injury and professional malpractice matters
- Defense Base Act actions against contractors and insurance carriers
- Employment discrimination, federal rights, personnel law, whistleblower retaliation, public policy retaliation
- Qui tam (false claims) suits against private corporations for defrauding the taxpayer
- Government contracts disputes and executive compensation

He served two years in the United States Department of Justice as Counsel to the Deputy Attorney General on matters involving constitutional litigation, and for five years was the government's chief enforcer of federal employment rights and whistleblower disclosures as the head of the U.S. Office of Special Counsel. He garnered national news for his work in the grounding of 1000 airplanes due to unsafe cracks in fusilages, his pursuit of disciplinary actions against high administration officials in multiple departments and the White House, and championing the rights of nationally recognized whistleblowers in such places as the Department of Defense (faulty Katrina pumps and government contracting irregularities), the Border Patrol (fraudulent kickback scheme), Bureau of Prisons (toxic releases) and the Federal Aviation Administration (cover up of FAA air traffic system near misses, widespread cover up of airworthiness inspections). He has testified on federal rights before the United States Congress and has written for and appeared in the media on programs such as NPR, CNN, C-Span, NBC Nightly News, The Washington Post, The New York Times, The Los Angeles Times, USA Today, US News & World Report, Newsweek, St. Louis Post Dispatch.
